C. Wess Daniels is the released minister of Camas Friends Church, a father of two (really cool) little girls, a husband and a doctoral student at Fuller Theological Seminary. Among his many interests are nourishing Christ-centered faith, encouraging cross-branch friendships in the Religious Society of Friends and trying to start what he calls the “Quaker Revolution.” But since things happen closer to the pace of evolution among Friends, he spends the rest of his days enjoying tasty locally roasted coffee, reading books that make him look smarter than he really is, playing imaginative games with his daughters, and learning how to watch for unexpected moments of grace. If you’re bored visit him at: gatheringinlight.com

Postmodernism? Participatory culture? Being “missional”? What does all of this stuff mean, and why should Quakers care?

But hang on a second... finding ways to resist our culture’s consumerism, hierarchy and passivity? Revitalizing the Friends movement? Becoming co-workers with God in the new creation? Maybe there’s something here!

We certainly think so—and we invite you to join us for

Heralding the New Creation:
Mission as Participation in the Quaker Tradition

C. Wess Daniels will help us think about the renewal of our tradition through a renewal of mission. He will touch on the first Friends’ understanding of their mission, the way that 20th century evangelical Friend Everett Cattell thought about it, the ways that convergent Friends today are building new communities online and face-to-face, and how our local meetings and churches can live out the new creation by fostering a participatory culture.
